Marguerite Duras said “For the only writing is the writing of poetry. True stories are poems.” As with Rimbaud, the foresighted poet, Duras lives through her creation like an existential experience, a vocation, an “ecstasy” of oneself that brings Donadieu, her real name, to Duras. The cry of a criminal or of tragic passion wrote it. Her words are verbatim, in the theater or in film. Her work gives the impression of a single lyric that is still recognizable throughout everything.
